

As technology advances, marketplace changes will occur. It is not the duty of government to determine which technologies will prevail, but rather to provide a level playing field so that the American consumer has the ability to choose between as many options as possible and so that each provider is encouraged to deliver the highest level of service for the lowest cost. Artificial barriers such as preventing one set of businesses from providing the best service possible only serve to limit the benefits to the consumer and I would encourage the FCC to reject this proposal and allow each company to compete for customers to the best of their abilities so that all Americans can emerge as the winners.
